MATH CLUB

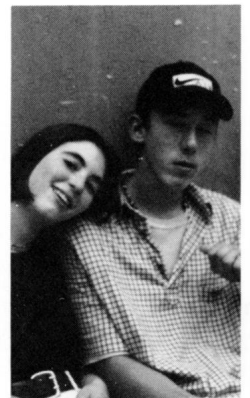

THE MATH CLUB?

Often at lunch, "What the . . . @/*!!!???" is heard coming from room 104. Followed by Ms. Bairds frustratingly logical explanation of a maddening math problem. We're Enka Ki, Helene B, Peki T, Vidya G, and Lulu A. Driven by an insane notion of placing well in various math competitions, each week we meet with the ever-patient Ms. Baird to practise, train and flex our abilities to pick either: A, B, C, D or NONE OF THE ABOVE.

Rabin's murder came amid heightened fears in Israel concerning possible suicide-attacks by Islamic activists, following the assassination Oct. 26 of Fathi al-hiqaqi. Shiqaqi was the leader of the militant Islamic Jihad (Islamic Holy War) movement in the Gaza Strip. The group blamed Israel for the assassination. [See below, p. 811A3]

A Tragic Fall for Superman

THE COMIC-BOOK SUPERMAN died about three years ago—slain during a colossal battle with an alien arch-enemy named Doomsday. Seven issues later he was back in action, resurrected by an artist's ink and imagination. If only silver-screen Superman Christopher Reeve could be as lucky.

Reeve, 42, lay last week in a Virginia hospital, paralyzed and breathing only with the aid of a respirator after suffering a stroke. He is expected to remain in an equine hospital in Maryland.

CANADA/COVER

BY D'ARCY JENISH

A trial determines guilt or innocence; it does not necessarily explain what makes an accused tick. In the end, after four months and 86 witnesses, Paul Bernardo remained as opaque as ever, a blandly handsome young suburbanite whose hobby happened to be abducting and murdering teenage girls, a man who, for whatever reasons, seemed to lack essential human ingredients—things like values, conscience, and empathy.

Under Canadian law, Bernardo cannot apply for parole for 25 years. As well, he will be sentenced on the other seven convictions when he appears before the Ontario Court of Appeal in Toronto on Sept. 15; those terms range from 10 to 15 years in prison.
