A rearrangement of clouds
To cover the sky
Is just a Prelude
To the grand opening of the sun.

Editorial

“There we were standing all in one place,
A generation lost in space,
With no time left to start again.”

These words, taken from the verses of a song, quite popular a few years ago, so accurately present the outcome of a generation whose spirit has suffered the consequences of its lifestyle. It is a sad fact that the youth of the late 60's, a generation of kids who tried to make it in a world of conformity by being different from the others, have found themselves in a limbo where they can neither move forward nor return to their unique past.

It is we, however, the youth of the early 70's the next generation to follow, who have found ourselves bearing the stigma of a bad reputation. The “older set” knows that we are different but they still are not sure as to how they are to label us.

Meanwhile, we find ourselves sandwiched between the two sides. Our expectations for the future can only be described as frightening. We see an ominous and turbulent world ahead filled with strikes, corruption, scandals, rising crime and threats on world peace. No wonder a sharp observer has labeled us “a generation of cynics”.

We need someone to explain to us the world and its wonders, its traps and its pitfalls, but times have changed so quickly that we can no longer look up to our older brothers and sisters. Sometimes it seems that they have enough trouble keeping up with the world themselves.

If it were just a question of surviving, perhaps we could manage. But the essence of living in today's world is infinitely more complicated than that. Standards and morals experience tremendous upheavals with increasing frequency making the adaption to each change more and more difficult.

There exist many differences between us and our preceding generations. Most are based on a distinct shift towards that which is more conservative. We no longer want to “change the world” or “promote the revolution”. We just want to be able to live with an understanding of ourselves and our environment. Perhaps there is a hint somewhere in this trend. Perhaps it suggests that after almost a decade of violent unrest, the youth of society has finally settled down to understanding its status in today's changing world.

PARADOX

Browning suddenly walked out of the shadows as though he had not been there a moment ago. A final check and all would be ready for the greatest feat ever performed by man: time travel. He stepped into the eerily shimmering field and stood still. The entire process was automatic from that point on.

As he awaited the formation of the warp, he wondered whether it would be possible to alter the course of events in the world. Could history be changed? Then a more disturbing thought occurred to him. He remembered the stories he had read as a child. They were stories of time travellers like himself. If a man killed his parents before they had ever met, he would never have been born. If such was the case, then he could not have killed them. If they had not died, then he would have been born.

Or, a man could steal a future invention and claim it as his own in the present, but by the time of the birth of its true inventor, would it have become obsolete? Who then would have invented it first? As he pondered over these and similar enigmas, his form faded into the glow of the field.

Browning suddenly walked out of the shadows as though he had not been there a moment ago. A final check and all would be ready for the greatest feat ever performed by man: time travel. He stepped into the eerily shimmering field and stood still. The entire process was automatic from that point on...

TEACHERS HAVE NO SENSES OF HUMOUR or THE TIME MY TEACHER BROKE HER LEG

Gentlemen, I am here today to prove once and for all that teachers have no sense of humour. I will now proceed to make my point and show my references.

- 1) New York Times article; "Teachers, A Species Without Humour."
- 2) Chicago Sun article; "Do Teachers Crawl Out of the Woodwork?"
- 3) Montreal Star article; "Are Teachers Born Humourless?"
- 4) Newsweek article; "Do They Laugh at Failing Students?"
- 5) Sunday Express article; "Teachers, People without a Word for Laugh."

I am also in possession of an international poll which was recently taken and which proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Thoracular region (or laugh organ) of a teacher somehow degenerates or is lessened to such a degree that those of the Teacher Species (or Makus Go Nuts Sapiens) are put in a mood so that he, she or it can not laugh. We, my staff and I, went around and told jokes to various people. Our studies show that teachers laughed only at the jokes where someone is hurt. In fact, when asked why they did not laugh, they forced us to sit in a corner.

Laughter Poll

From reading the articles mentioned above and from going to various teacher meetings, we conclude that teachers are humourless. Also, a great risk to myself and my staff, we disguised ourselves as students, and enrolled in an average high school. The name of the school is unimportant, but let it suffice to say that this school is in North America, Cote St. Luc, Quebec, Canada, around 5700 Parkhaven Ave. I do not want to reveal the name of the school for fear of hurting anyone. We talked with many teachers (incognito of course) and found that they would not laugh. They did let out with a mean cackle in the event that a student failed an exam. We remained there for three months compiling information, and we can conclude that teachers do not even have a funny bone, let alone a Thoracular region. I hope that after hearing my debate you will replace all teachers by machines because of the better humour of machines.

(Wait for applause) Thank-you.

THE CORPSE

I stare - but I see nothing
My eyes strive to pierce through the leaden veils of their lids and cannot,
the lids will not open, they are sealed
by networks of cobwebs!

Don't they see, I'm dead!
Why do they torment me?
Do they enjoy tormenting a corpse?
I raise a dead limb. I push. It is no use.
I am trapped. They have strapped my corpse to the table.

A thin weak limb brushes my restraints partly to the side.
It is my arm. Perhaps I am not dead. Perhaps I am.
My lids are cruelly ripped open.
A dark grey form looms over me. It strikes out with a - sound
God, I hate getting up in the morning.

THE HITCHHIKER

New York City stood bare against the cold autumn wind. It was nightfall and a hard rain had started its cold sweep of the city streets.

On one darkened street corner, beneath a dimmed street lamp, a lone hitchhiker, his thumb pleading for a ride, braved the elements that so mercilessly cut at him. A normal citizen in all respects except for one, this man was sitting in a wheelchair.

An occasional car splashed its way past the street corner passing the forlorn figure. Before the driver could even realize that the hitchhiker was different, before appreciating the fact that this poor cripple needed help, the driver's instinct of the city, the curious impulse that says: "don't get involved," forced him to continue on his way.

Time passed, the rain continued to fall and still the lone hitchhiker had not yet been picked up. His face, twisted from the cold cried out into the cruel night for someone to stop. Yet it seemed that the influence of the city spirit meant more to its inhabitants than their "good Christian charity".

Just as the paraplegic was about to quit and fade back into the shadows that he seemed destined to live in, he heard a screech, a honk of an automobile horn and a voice crying out to him. At last, someone who really cared! A kind soul amidst the cold city had appeared as if by magic to come to the aid of those in need. The hitchhiker cried out in joy and wheeled himself out to the curb. The good samaritan had already gotten out of his car to help him with the wheelchair but it was then that a most surprising thing happened. The hitchhiker, no longer as crippled as he at first seemed, picked himself out of the chair, smoothly placed it in the back seat, climbed into the front as agilely as you or I, bent over to a much surprised driver and said, "Brooklyn Heights please."

SHOWDOWN

The bright light rays of the arena, bright enough to make a person squint, extended down to the flat surface. At the north end stood a tri-coloured figure, which a million eyes focused upon. There was a small wave of frozen confetti just to the side of where the figure rested. Suddenly it began moving swiftly towards the center of the rink, a figure with limbs swaying with a steady, rhythmic mobility. Then a distinct click; as the blade of a stick make contact with a little black disc, and foot by foot, push by push, the accelerating power took hold of the speeding figure exerting it to full force and pushing it down the rink while the figure tapped the disc from one side of the stick's wooden rod, grasping it tightly, to a point just above its shoulders; then, with the strength of a bull, lowered it quickly, lifting one leg simultaneously. And as a sudden sounding crack echoed throughout the arena, the small disc took off, and the black comet-like tail that was faintly left behind quickly faded. Within seconds, the circular object travelling in flight at the speed of a bullet, was cushioned and halted by the cross-hatched mesh of the steel-framed net. There was a very abrupt flash of red light which reigned over the white rays of the arena, relieving the tension, causing an uproar, announcing the climax of the world's fastest sport - the goal.

Ted Yudelson.

I saw a city far beyond reach,
It's buildings were towers of glass.
When the sun came up and shone on each
I thought of a memory past.

Now this city is far beyond hope,
Pollution and crime aren't the last.
They just hang each one on a separate rope.
As I think of a memory past.

Iona Hassoun

And when it rained
for nights and days God promised that after every rain there would be a rainbow that after every tear there would be a star but yet there is not

And sometimes there is no rain or no sun
but only clouds hanging drifting for eternities and lifetimes never full enough to let the rain drip out or light enough to let the sun creep in there is no sun or no rainbow or no rain
but there is always a black pot at the end.

CANDIDS!

Dedicated to:

two basketball teams who could have made it but never got the chance...
a volleyball team that played but got no recognition...
non-existent football, hockey, soccer and ski teams...
a newspaper with a life of two issues... a clandestine bridge club that was forced to play in the halls...
a school play that lived in name only... a spring carnival that never got further than Dr. De Groot's desk... a Reach for the Top team that went into its second game with no practice... a great Grad Dance that almost never was.... a student council that had no authority...

Auntie Gertie wants you to be a trapeze artist...

Great!
But what about you?

If you'd rather keep both feet on the ground,
take a look at some of the career programmes
we offer:

Commercial art, graphics, interior design,
professional theatre

Community recreational leadership, social service, business administration, data processing, commerce, executive secretarial science, retail management

Mechanical technology, electrotechnology, civil engineering technology, chemical technology

Nursing, radiography, cytotechnology, medical laboratory technology, nucleography, radiotherapy

And, of course, we have excellent arts and science programmes

Acknowledgements

A lot of hard work and dedication went into making Prelude 75-76 a reality. We of the staff, would like to take this space to acknowledge and thank some of the people who aided us in our efforts to give Wagar High a great yearbook.

TO the secretaries in the office who supplied us with scotch tape and scissors and paper and stamp pads etc...

TO Audrey Szamatolski and Penny Goodman who sacrificed their lunches to promote the book.

TO Larry Lubin who aided us with the advertising.

TO all of the advertisers of Prelude '76 who, without them, this book would have been impossible.

TO Dr. De Groot and Miss Snow who aided us whenever they could.

And finally; To Mr. Hart and Mr. Neasmith who listened to our problems, helped us through rough times, supplied us with advice and gave us encouragement, an element that was sorely lacking in Wagar High this year.

To all of you,

THANKS! ! !
