Dear Graduate,

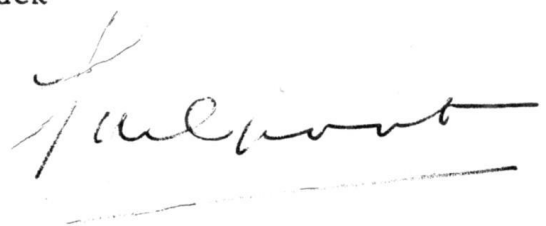

To the graduates of 1970 I extend my warmest congratulations. You have successfully completed your schooling and are standing on the threshold of a new era and a new decade.

The world which we bequeath you is essentially an uneasy one. While in the last decade we lived under what might be called the shadow of the moving towards the hungry seventies. We must view with great apprehension the ever widening gulf between the have and have not nations; we must be concerned about the racial tensions, the loosening standards of public and private morality and the tension of modern living; we must be troubled by the ever increasing danger that pollution poses. In man's quest for more material resources man is relentlessly destroying his natural heritage, and in the process ultimately himself. And he has destroyed his own life. As one naturalist has said:

"The beauty and harmony of the world have been destroyed, a vanished harmony may yet inspire a composer; but when the last individual of a race of living things breathes no more another heaven and another earth must pass before such a one can be again."

You will be faced with these challenges which will increase in magnitude, but we hope that the education which you have received at Wagar will prepare you for the life that lies ahead. Whether this is CEGEP, University, business or industry, face the challenge with courage and determination.

Good Luck

What is life? The attempt to define this term has challenged the greatest thinkers of all time and their metaphors would fill many volumes; "Life is a bubble, a disease, a dream, a highway, a jest, a mystery, or a journey".

Perhaps in the present context a quotation from Lamartine's "Meditations Poetiques" would be more fitting for this occasion: "Life is a succession of preludes". For each member of the graduating class at Wagar High, graduation marks an end, but it also introduces him to a series of preludes to life, through further study for professional life, or through work experience in the world of commerce and industry. May this year be a joyous prelude to a succession of life experiences which will bring each one of you personal fulfilment and satisfaction.
